TALL BEARDED IRIS

Of all the flowers in the garden there are few that excel the IRISES for their lavish display of color in May and June. The various varieties range in colors from silvery white through the yellow pinks, lavenders, blues and deep purples with smoky hues and all shades between. They must be seen to be appreciated. The new tall large-flowering varieties of today are far superior to the small varieties of our grandmothers day.

Irises will grow in any good soil and blossom profusely with but a minimum of care.

The following twenty five varieties are about as good a collection as there is in this country.

The figures after each variety denote the rating given by the Iris-Society of America. All varieties are rated according to their merits from one to ten or one and one tenth to nine and nine tenths. You will note that all our varieties are above seven. There is no variety yet produced that can merit No. 10.

"S" means Standards or upright petals and "F" Falls or side petals.
